The brain
is a wardrobe.

For thoughts,
like clothes,
are disorderly.

For secrets,
like precious gems,
are locked away safely.

For the right words,
like the finest dresses,
are not easily found.

For justification,
like the next pick,
is always around.

For the most beautiful possessions
- wait, wait, wait -
are arrayed at the back.

For when well used,
crafts a master
from a jack.

The brain is a wardrobe.
For what is vital is within,
unexplored.
